

Above: Portrait of Setukkomuccon—a Sarcée brave who lived near Calgary, Alberta, Canada (c.1885): Photo by William Hanson Boorne.

On 24 July 1674, Alphonse Little Popular interviewed Mr. Antoine Lonesinger, who was born a Cree, in 1888, on the Red Pheasant Reserve No. 108—and he later moved to the Sweet Grass Reserve No. 113: (Both Reserves being in Saskatchewan, nearby the Battlefords). Mr. Lonesinger was known as a storyteller and singer, and had a command of the Cree language. Joanne Greenwood transcribed 16 pages of the interview—a copy of which was saved to the Saskatchewan Archives (Tape No. IH-030): (For complete biography, see IH-052, p. 11: Legend of Cut Knife Hill; Story of Black Rock, a Stoney warrior; Story of Chokecherry Wood, a Stoney warrior. This rendition of Mr. Lonesinger's stories has been cross-referenced with other research, including (as follows): Personal interviews by Floyd Favel with Jim Tootoosis (1995) and Leo Tootoosis (2010)—and Edward Ahenakew's "Voices of the Plains Cree" (Canadian Plains Research Centre, 1995), as well—to name just a few of the other sources referenced.

The Story of Kees-kih-koonan ("Broken Knife"), a Sarcée (Tsuut'ina)

A true pre-contact tale of how "the horse" first met with "the gun" on the Great Interior Prairies.

In the 1840s, the Cree were attacked by a group of Tsuut'ina (Sarcée) warriors from the Siksika or Blackfoot Confederacy to the southwest. The battle was fought just to the north of present-day Cut Knife on the highest hill in the surrounding region. Under their skillful leader, the Sarcée fought hard but were ultimately defeated. The Cree, however, were so impressed by the fighting abilities of the Sarcée leader that they named the battle site after him viz. Broken Knife's Lookout. When European settlers later arrived in the area, they bastardized the name... calling the area after a mistranslated version of the name, calling their townsite—Cut Knife Hill.

Introduction

The Great Plains Culture Area, showing the approximate locations of Indian tribes circa 1820, after the acquisition of horses and migration onto the plains, and before displacement by non-Indians (with modern boundaries)

Sarcée Territory

Long before the town of Cut Knife (Saskatchewan) was established, before Canada became a country, before the fur traders arrived, the north-western territory that is now known as the Prairie Provinces viz. Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta (sa well as Minnesota, the Dakotas, Wyoming and Montana) was occupied by numerous Indigenous nations, including (as follows): the Plains Cree and Plains Ojibwe, Nakota (Assiniboine/Stoney), Dakota/Lakota, Gros Ventré (Atsina), Flathead, and the Piegan, Blood, Siksika of the Blackfoot Confederacy as well as the Tsuut'ina/Tsuu T'ina (Sarcée)

The area around Cut Knife was then known as homeland of the Plains Cree.

Once part of the northern Dane-zaa ('Beaver/Castor') nation, the Tsuut'ina migrated south onto the Great Interior Prairies during the 1700s—prior to any written records of the area. During the 1810s, the Sarcée co-habited the Beaver Hills (near present-day Edmonton) with the Plains Cree. At some point, however, they came into conflict with the Cree and moved further to the southwest, eventually forming an alliance with the Blackfoot Confederacy. The Beaver/Castor tribes are still living in the District of Athabasca (northwest Alberta and Saskatchewan prior to the creation of these provinces as established by the 1905 Saskatchewan and Alberta Acts), whereat are found the Chipewyan, Slave, Dog Rib, and other Indian peoples.

Tsuut'ina Language

The Tsuut'ina language is a pure Athapaskan dialect allied to the Beaver language as transitional to the Slave and Chippewayan proper—as such, it is closely related to the languages of other Dene groups in northern Canada and Alaska—also through Oregon and California into Northern Mexico, including the Navajo Umpquas, Apache, and other tribes of the American Southwest, which had migrated south along the Rocky Mountain foothills over one thousand years ago and developed separately, becoming the most southerly of the Athabaskan peoples.

"As the Indian languages are numerous, so do they greatly vary in their effect upon the ear: We have the rapid Cootoonay of the Rocky Mountains and the stately Blackfoot of the plains, the slow, embarrassed Flathead of the Mountains; the smooth-toned Pierced-nosed, the difficult Sussee (Sarcée) and Chippewayan; the sing-song Assiniboine, the deliberate Cree, and the sonorous, majestic, Chippewayan. The writer can corroborate these statements from his association with the tribes mentioned. Oftentimes has he tried to understand the Sarcée tongue, as he has conversed with the natives in the Blackfoot tongue, but the clicking sound of many of their words and the double guttural made it impossible. The whole of their language seems to consist of clicks and gutturals... that it is difficult to distinguish one syllable from another, and the study of the language had to be given up in despair. The women and children invariably speak the Sarcée language, but the men use in addition the Blackfoot and Cree."

Horatio Hale,

"Ethnology in the United States Exploring Expedition"

According to Bancroft's "Native Races,"¹ their language is "harsh and guttural, difficult of enunciation, and unpleasant to the ear"—a very deep guttural, the sounds emanating from the throat, which renders it difficult for Eurofolk to understand or acquire. The Sarcée speak their own language amongst themselves, but in conversation with others they use the Cree or Blackfoot languages. Owing to their relationship to the Blackfoot Confederacy, and their proximity to the members of it, they use the Blackfoot language more than the Cree, and seem to be perfectly at home when using it.

¹ "The works of Hubert Howe Bancroft: The native races" (Vol. V): Primitive history" (1886).

According to W. A. Morris, this work was largely written by H. L. Oak, T. A. Harcourt, Albert Goldschmidt, W. M. Fisher and William Nemos (see Oregon historical quarterly, v. 4, p. 301-310). "Bancroft's work is a most laborious encyclopedia of all that is known up to to-day of the native races of the Pacific States, and it embraces all the inhabitants of the region to the west of the Mississippi from the Arctic Sea to the Isthmus of Panama. His aim... is not so much to write history as to provide materials out of which it may be eventually written by others."

Athabasca River Basin

North Saskatchewan River

The name 'Tsúut'ina' ('Sarcée') is believed to have originated from a Siksikáí'powahsin word (Blackfoot language) (as follows): 'saxsi,' 'saxsiwak' or 'sasewuck': translated as 'Woody Country Indian,' 'Bold People' or 'people among the beavers.' In the 18th and 19th centuries, the North American Plains Indians of Athabaskan linguistic stock lived near the Upper Saskatchewan River and the Athabaska River (in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan).

Sarcée Political and Social Organization

The Sarcée have never been a large tribe: At the beginning of the 19th century they numbered "120 warriors, in 35 tents," or about 400 people. Their hunting grounds at this time were on the Upper Saskatchewan River, toward the Rocky Mountains.

They are similar in their political and social organization to the Blackfoot, having a head chief over the tribe and a minor chief over each band. They have also an annual sun dance—which cannot be of Athapascan origin, but must have been learned from the Blackfoot. Indeed, in all their social customs, they are essentially members of the Blackfoot Confederacy. They are sun worshippers, whose religious ideas have been modified through contact with the Eurofolk. Dancing, singing, and throwing the wheel and arrows are native amusements, to which they have added card playing (learned from the Eurofolk).

Howard Terpning: Preparing for the Sun Dance" "(Blood/Blackfoot)
Print prepared 1987

Historically, the Tsuut'ina believed in supernatural powers that could be obtained through a vision or dream and was enshrined in a tipi painting or a totemic medicine object, such as a beaver bundle or pipe bundle. The quest for supernatural power and the attainment of certain character traits, such as bravery for men and chastity for women—infer, were highly valued.

The boys run naked in early childhood, having, occasionally, a garment or cloth around their loins. The girls are always dressed, although the raiment is oftentimes scanty. The virginity of girls was guarded for participation in the Sun Dance ceremony¹ and some of the other ceremonies.

With the notable exception of the Comanche, nearly all plains tribes placed exceptional importance in the annual Sun Dance, which stressed penance and in most cases self-torture by young warriors to demonstrate their bravery and ability to withstand pain. Among the Blood people of the Blackfoot, the youth's body was painted with white clay, and sage wreaths were affixed to head, wrists and ankles. Elders would cut incisions in the initiate's breasts, then insert skewers of elderberry wood to which were attached rawhide ropes, firmly tied at the other end to a center pole upon which might rest the head or skull of a buffalo. After prayer the young man was expected to dance against the rope until the skewers tore loose from his flesh. The scars remained the rest of his life, attesting to his courage.

¹ The 'sun dance ceremony' is best represented in the 1970 Western film "A Man Called Horse"—said to be an authentic depiction of American Indian life in the Dakota territory of about 1820. The movie stars Richard Harris as Lord John Morgan, an English peer cast somewhat adrift in the American West and captured by Sioux Indians. He lives with them and begins to understand their way of life. Eventually, he is accepted as part of the tribe and aspires to become their leader. The film is directed by Elliot Silverstein, produced by Sandy Howard, written by Jack DeWitt—and is based on a short story by the Western writer Dorothy M. Johnson: "A Man Called Horse," which was first published in 1950 in Collier's magazine and again in 1968 in Johnson's book "Indian Country."

The 'sun dance ceremony' is also in the "Return of a Man Called Horse"—a 1976 Western film directed by Irvin Kershner and written by Jack DeWitt. Richard Harris reprises his role as 'Horse,' a British aristocrat who became a member of a tribe of Lakota Sioux, who returns to America after dreaming of the Indians who had once adopted him needing his help. It was followed by a sequel in 1983, "Triumphs of a Man Called Horse."

According to the teachings of the Northern Paiute spiritual leader Wovoka (renamed Jack Wilson), proper practice of the dance would reunite the living with spirits of the dead, bring the spirits to fight on their behalf, end westward expansion of the detested White people, and bring peace, prosperity, and unity to Native American peoples throughout the region. Preaching a message of universal love, he often presided over circle dances, which symbolized the sun's heavenly path across the sky. Practice of the Ghost Dance movement was believed to have contributed to Lakota resistance to assimilation under the Dawes Act. In the Wounded Knee Massacre of December 1890, United States Army forces killed at least 153 Miniconjou and Hunkpapa from the Lakota people.

"Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee" is a 2007 Western historical drama television film adapted from the 1970 book of the same name by Dee Brown. The film was written by Daniel Giat, directed by Yves Simoneau and produced by HBO Films. The book on which the movie is based on is a history of Native Americans in the American West in the 1860s and 1870s, focusing upon the transition from traditional ways of living to living on reservations and their treatment during that period.

The Wounded Knee massacre was not the end of the Ghost Dance religious movement.

Scene of the 'sun dance' ritual from "A Man Called Horse" (1970)

Courtship began with flirting during chores. In traditional Tsut'ina culture, the family usually arranged marriages, and the gifts exchanged reflected family status.

At the early age of twelve or thirteen the girls are sold in marriage; sometimes to an old man, who may have several wives. Polygamy was practiced, mainly sororal polygyny—in which two or more sisters share one husband or more, although not to so great a degree as in times of war, when the men were slain and the women compelled to marry members of their own tribe.

Newly-wed couples customarily lived with the wife's family... the daughter's husband supported his wife's family... and hunted for them, until the couple acquired enough property to be on their own. There were always more women in the tribe than men—as warriors were constantly killed on raids or in battle. Men were thus obligated to marry a deceased brother's wife—a form of adelphic polyandry (comparable to Levirate marriage).³

³ Si'k-okskitsis (Charcoal, or literally: Black Wood Ashes) son of Red Plume and Killed Twice was a Blood Indian warrior and holy man. He was related through one of his father's wives to Peenaquim (Seen From Afar)—the leading war chief of the Blood tribe of the Mamyowi (Fish Eaters band): Peenaquim was a great chief, having 10 wives and 100 horses, but was among the first of his band to die in a devastating smallpox epidemic during the winter of 1869–70—chieftainship was taken for a few months by his older brother, Kyiyi-siksinum (Black Bear), and when the latter died in 1870 his nephew Mékaisto (Red Crow) became chief of the Bloods and famous in his own right (q.v.).

When Si'k-okskitsis (Charcoal) was still young, his family broke from the Fish Eaters, then led by Mékaisto (Red Crow), to form a band of their own. This band had a poor reputation within the tribe and was accused of indolence and trouble-making. In 1880, an Indian Reserve was established for his band—but Si'k-okskitsis did not adjust well to life on the Reservation... and, in 1883, he was arrested for killing a steer belonging to a nearby rancher. For this crime he spent a year in the North-West Mounted Police jail at Fort Macleod. After his release he vowed he would never be put behind bars again.

NB: One need only remember how Are-je-wam (Scraping Hide) was made a criminal for killing an Indian Agent—Are-je-wam's nine-year-old son had died of starvation because the Indian Agent was stealing decent rations from the reservation and distributing bone, fat and maggoty-green meat to the 'redskin savages' in his care. A similar misfortune befell Jean-Baptiste Kitchi-Manito-Waya (Almighty Voice) son of Plains Saulteaux Indian Sinnookeesick (Sounding Sky) and Natchookonek (Spotted Calf of Many Colours) daughter of Willow Cree Chief Kápeyakwáskonom (One Arrow)—a legendary Cree from the One Arrow Indian Reserve in Duck Lake area.

With no more battles or raids in which to participate now that the Bloods had given up their traditional nomadic, hunting life-style for the reserve, Si'k-okskitsis turned to native religion, joining the sacred Dog Society and later the Horn Society. In addition, he encouraged Anu'tsis-tsis-aki (Pretty Wolverine Woman)—his fourth wife, to participate in the Motokix Society—the only secret society for women on the Blood reserve. By the mid 1890s she had become one of the leaders of the society and Si'k-okskitsis was recognized as 'a holy man.'

Soon after taking another wife, Iyokaki (Sleeping Woman), in 1896, he learned that Anu'tsis-tsis-aki was having an affair with one of her young cousins named Nina'msko'taput-sikumi (Medicine Pipe Man returning with a Crane War Whoop): Incest was a great shame amongst the proud Blood Indians. On September 30th, Si'k-okskitsis found them together and shot the cousin... who fell dead upon his adulterous wife... seemingly without a wound—for the bullet had entered through the eye. Reservation life and the White man's rules were forgotten... and Si'k-okskitsis returned to the traditional ways of his forefathers. Having killed a man, however, he believed that his life was over and that he would be hanged for his crime. To prepare for his entry into the land of the dead he reverted to two ancient customs of the Blood Indians: he decided 1) to kill an important person whose spirit would announce his coming, and 2) to kill Anu'tsis-tsis-aki and himself so that their spirits would travel together and she would eternally be his slave.

On October 12th, the body of Nina'msko'taput-sikumi was found and the wound discovered... Si'k-okskitsis 'attempted' to kill Mékaisto and 'shot and wounded' a farm instructor, Edward McNeill. He then fled the reserve with his two wives, a daughter, a mother-in-law, and two stepsons, going south to Lee Creek and then to the Blood Indian timber limit near the Montana border. In the mean time one of the biggest man-hunts in western Canadian history was being organized by NWMP Superintendent Samuel Benfield Steele.

Charcoal's camp was discovered when, when a force of more than 24 armed men attacked on October 17th, he escaped on foot with his wives and a stepson; that evening he stole two NWMP horses and fled north toward the Porcupine Hills. By the next day the search party had grown to more than 100 mounted police and Indian scouts, but Si'k-okskitsis continued to elude police patrols, travelling long distances and stealing fresh horses when his mounts were worn out. On October 30th, by which time his stepson and both wives had escaped him, Sam Steele of the Mounties had his entire family arrested to keep them from aiding him: 26 people including 2 children (aged 5 and 1 year old).

In the long winter evenings the Sarcée families will gather in their lodges, or in their modern log houses, and, with drum and song, have a 'tea dance,' where tea is drunk in profusion and the well-filled pipe is passed around. Stories of the old buffalo days are told, and as the aged men speak vividly of battles, scalps, hairbreadth escapes, horses, and women captured, and glorious wounds, the hearts of the young men are thrilled, and they long for the time when they may follow in the footsteps of their forefathers; but when they step beyond the lodge they see the agent's house, and they are at once confronted with the fact that the pale-face devils dwell in the land, and he has come to rule. Thoughts too deep for words rankle in their breasts, and fain would they live a free hunter's life and taste the sweets of war.

Brought into contact with civilization native customs were dying out.

The Land Grabbers and Disenfranchised Indians

After Emperor Napoléon Bonaparte of France and the fledgling United States agreed upon the Louisiana Purchase⁴ and after

Sgt. W. B. Wilde Sgt.-Maj. Sam Steele Lt.-Gov. Mackintosh Si'k-okskitsis

Two of Si'k-okskitsis' brothers—Left Hand and Bear Back Bone were released on November 5th to help capture the fugitive. In exchange for their cooperation, Steele allowed the release of Left Hand's sick child and dropped charges of cattle-stealing against the son of Bear Back Bone.

Travelling between the Piegian Indian Reserve and the Blood Reserve, Si'k-okskitsis continued to thwart NWMP attempts to entrap him. On November 9th police picked up his trail near the Piegian Reserve and on the following day, he was sighted by a patrol of Piegian scouts near Pincher Creek. NWMP Sergeant William Brock Wilde joined the pursuit and when he closed on Charcoal he was shot and killed. The following night Charcoal arrived at his brothers' camp on the Blood Reserve where he was captured in the early morning of November 12th and turned over to the NWMP after an unsuccessful suicide attempt.

Si'k-okskitsis was tried and convicted at Fort Macleod for the murder of Medicine Pipe Man and Sergeant W. B. Wilde. Although the first conviction was successfully appealed, the second was upheld... and Si'k-okskitsis was hanged on the morning of 16 March 1897. Despite assurances from Lieutenant-Governor Charles Herbert Mackintosh that the body would be turned over to his family for an Indian burial, Charcoal was claimed as an eleventh-hour convert to Christianity and he was buried in the Roman Catholic cemetery at Stand Off (Alberta) on the Blood reserve.

⁴ Once Napoléon had control of Spain, the Louisiana Territory was transferred to France. The 1803 Louisiana Purchase was the acquisition of the territory of Louisiana from France by the American government viz. the 13 Colonies—approximately 827,000 square miles of land west of the Mississippi River was sold in return for $15 million dollars, or approximately $18 dollars per square mile.

Napoléon Rbt. Morris A. Hamilton John Adams

At the time of the Louisiana Purchase, the 13 Colonies had around $7 million dollars in revenues and were already running a $3.2 million dollar deficit. Like all governments, and especially because they didn't yet collect taxes, they had no choice but to go to a Rothschildian bank viz. the First Bank of the United States—opened by Robert Morris and Alexander Hamilton. The Rothschilds were not only in charge of the Bank of England... and financing the Napoleonic Wars, but they had monetary control of the fledgling American democracy—and after putting George Washington's successor, John Adams, in the newly-built White House in 1800, they had successfully isolated the country's Chief Executive. It was time to expand westward.

The purchase doubled the size of the United States, greatly strengthened the country materially and strategically, provided a powerful impetus to westward expansion, and confirmed the doctrine of 'manifest destiny' and implied powers of the federal Constitution.

Canada re-purchased Rupert's Lands from the Hudson's Bay Company, there were still no laws governing trade with native inhabitants of the Great Interior Plains, so gold seekers, fur traders, whiskey traders, wolvers, buffalo hide agents and many other shady characters moved in with a vengeance. What resulted was epidemics of small pox and measles, an influx of alcohol, and the buffalo were rapidly depleting in numbers. The First Nations on both sides of the border wanted to protect their way of life—making it easy for government agents and land speculators to connive them into believing that making treaties was the only way to accomplish this.

The 1855 Lame Bull Treaty in the U.S. was sold to the natives as a means of providing security for the Blackfoot people by imposing a neutral hunting zone between the Blackfoot people and other southern nations. It was advocated as a peace treaty, not land surrender, but, in effect, it pushed Blackfoot territory back from the Yellowstone River to the Musselshell River. Then, in 1874, the area bordered by Birch Creek, Marias, Missouri and Sun Rivers was ceded by Act of Congress. In the same year, the NWMP were founded and sent to southern Alberta under the pretense of controlling problems with shady newcomers. And, in 1876, two weeks after the annihilation of Custer's 7th Cavalry at the Battle of Little Big Horn,⁵ a delegation of

⁵ The Battle of the Little Bighorn, also commonly referred to as Custer's Last Stand, is known to the Lakota and other Plains Indians as the Battle of the Greasy Grass.

In late-1875, Sioux and Cheyenne Indians defiantly left their reservations, outraged over the continued intrusions of Whites into their sacred lands in the Black Hills. They gathered in Montana with the great warrior Sitting Bull to fight for their lands. The following spring, two victories over the US Cavalry emboldened them to fight on in the summer of 1876. To force the large Indian army back onto their reservations, the Army dispatched three columns to attack in coordinated fashion, one of which contained Lt. Colonel George Custer and the 210 troops of the doomed U.S. Army's 7th Cavalry Unit.

Lt.-Col. Custer

Capt. Benteen

Maj. Reno

On 25 June 1876, an armed engagement between federal troops against a mixed band of Lakota Sioux, Cheyenne and Arapaho warriors was fought along the ridges, steep bluffs, and ravines of the Little Bighorn River, in south-central Montana Territory.

Custer deployed troops in a coordinated effort under Captain Frederick Benteen to prevent their escape through the upper valley of the Little Bighorn River. Major Marcus Reno—a drunken coward was to pursue the group, cross the river, and charge the women and children, sick and elderly in the Indian village with the remaining troops under his command.

Sioux came to meet with Isapo-muxika (Crowfoot) requesting he join them in their fight against the Whites. The Blackfoot people already knew what had happened as there had been a dozen Blackfoot tipis among the hundreds that Custer stumbled upon that fateful day. Immediately after that battle, all the Indian groups dispersed and returned to their traditional territories... when-so and whereof the Blackfoot delegation haply bragged about what had occurred and tried to rouse the braves for war. But, Isapo-muxika responded that he would not go to war unless it was for his own people.

The Beginning of the End for the Sarcée

In the early-19th century the westerly Plains Indians acquired horses, whereas their traditional enemies to the east viz. the Cree were trading for guns—and intertribal warfare increased to such an extent that several tribes, including the Sarcée, allied for mutual protection, forming the Blackfoot Confederacy, which included Blood, Piegan and Stoney, and allied with the Sarcée. Nevertheless, they continued to suffer from attacks of the Cree and other tribes—and their numbers were still farther reduced by epidemics, particularly the smallpox epidemics of 1836 and 1870 and one of scarlet fever in 1856—leaving more dead than alive.

John Chantler McDougall

NWMP Inspector
Maj.-Gen. E. S. Smyth

Jack C. E. Denny

Col P. Robertson-Ross

Hon. David Laird

Lt. Col. James Macleod

Gov. Alexander Morris

HRH Queen Victoria

Sir John A. Macdonald

DM: 'Masonic hand-in-vest' sign

After the battle, the Indians came through and stripped the bodies and mutilated all the uniformed soldiers, believing that the soul of a mutilated body would be forced to walk the earth for all eternity and could not ascend to heaven. Inexplicably, they stripped Custer's body and cleaned it, but did not scalp or mutilate it.

Outraged over the death of a popular Civil War hero on the eve of the Centennial, the nation demanded and received harsh retribution. The Black Hills dispute was quickly settled by redrawing the boundary lines, placing the Black Hills outside the reservation and open to white settlement. Within a year, the Sioux nation was defeated and broken. "Custer's Last Stand" was their last stand as well.

In 1874 the Dominion government sent Col P. Robertson-Ross, adjutant general of the Militia of Canada, to assess the situation in what is now Treaty No. 7 territory. Robertson-Ross reported that over 10,000 people lived in the area, acknowledged increasing conflict, and recommended an immediate police presence.

"The institutions of 'Law and Order,' as understood in civilized communities, are wholly unknown."

Lieutenant W^m Butler, 1871

John A. MacDonald immediately began organizing a police force—mercenary mounted riflemen which "should not be expressly military but should be styled 'police' and have the military bearing of the Irish Constabulary"—a "mixed force of 'pure White' Français and English, and half-breeds, too—after the British model of counter-acting religious and racial strife in colonial India."

Confirming Butler's assessment: "A large military force was not required, but that a certain 'force' would be found indispensable for 'the security of the country'."

"To prevent bloodshed & preserve order"

Col. P. Robertson-Ross, 1872,
Commanding Officer of the Canadian Militia
2nd Western Reconnaissance

Robertson-Ross' report was a contributing factor in Sir John A. Macdonald establishing the North-West Mounted Police. In the summer of 1874 the NWMP under the command of Lieut.-Col James Macleod dissolved the *American wolfer's whisky forts*⁶ and reported back to Ottawa that the First Nations were ready to negotiate a treaty.

Treaty No. 7

In the summer of 1875, Isapo-muxika (Crowfoot)—one of the Siksika leaders, spoke with Methodist missionary John McDougall, who had previously worked for the government, and who assured him that treaties were being planned. Isapo-muxika also spoke to Major-General Edward Selby Smith of the NWMP, about Ottawa's plans; Smith too assured Isapo-muxika that plans were in the works and that the government would be fair to the First Nations

On 22 September 1877, along with the Siksika (Blackfoot), Pikuni (Piegan), Kainai (Blood) and Stoney-Nakota, and the Tsuu T'ina (Sarcée) signed a treaty ceding their hunting grounds to the Dominion Government—Treaty No. 7—known as the Blackfoot Treaty, which

⁶ Two white 'wolf hunters' from Fort Benton, Montana built a trade post at the junction of the Belly & St. Mary's Rivers, (south-west of present Lethbridge), called Fort Hamilton: it quickly became known as Whoop-Up, the most notorious of the whiskey forts ...

Fort Whoop-Up

Fort Whoop-Up: a notorious trading place located in the Cyprus Hills badlands, frequented by American wolfers, who hated the Buffalo & hunted them (to near-extinction) for the hides, leaving the carcasses to rot, unapologetically, in inexplicable numbers: the wolfers, though, hated the Indian even worse, & took evil pleasure in the illegal trading of FIREWATER — made from kerosene and/or raw alcohol, (from which the concoction derives its name): mixed with red ink & the juice of boiled coarse tobacco, soap, bluestone, & flavoured, if so, with laudanum, molasses or sugar, & whatever spices were on hand. Gunpowder was often added to whoop-em-up!

& killed a number of (innocent) Assiniboine Indians, including women & children, at the Cyprus Hills, (in the south-west corner of Saskatchewan), in a dispute over the alleged theft of some horses.

was arranged by Lieutenant-Governor Laird and Lieut.-Col. J. F. Macleod—however, the Blackfoot Nation was in conflict with the Stoney-Nakota; this was a significant factor in the push for a treaty as conflict between these Indian Nations was increasing as a result of the depleted buffalo population.

There were concerns about survival, as these Nations struggled to withstand the increasing pressure on food sources due to encroaching pioneer settlement, and the displacement of Plains Métis and Cree populations, along with diseases such as small pox. Another issue was the American 'wolfer' whisky forts—the introduction of alcohol was proving to have a detrimental effect on the First Nations communities. In addition to addressing rising conflict and food scarcity, the government had a vested interest in securing land in what is now Alberta.

Mékaisto (Red Crow)

Chula (Stamixo'tokan, Bull Head)
Chief of the Tsuut'ina: (c.1890-94)
Photographer/Illustrator: Alexander Ross

Thathanka Iyotake (Sitting Buffalo Bull)
Chief of the Hunkpapa Lakota

Isapo-muxika (Crowfoot)
Head Chief of the Blood tribe
Photographed in Québec

In 1871 the Dominion government had promised British Columbia that a railway would reach the province within 10 years to establish adhesion to the confederacy; the First Nations' land needed to be ceded in order to fulfill this promise! NB: The transcontinental railway provided Rothschild's "City & Crown" viz. the Bank of England a shorter, cheaper, overland route across Dominion lands to transport British troops to its' possessions in India and Cathay (China).

Before the Dominion government could go ahead with its plans to build railways and establish pioneer settlements in the west it had to deal somehow with the people who already lived there (i.e., figure out a tricky way to steal their land out from under them as quickly and cheaply as possible). Several different First Nations groups hunted buffalo throughout the northwest, specifically the Plains Cree and Ojibwa, Assiniboine, Chippewa and the tribes of the Blackfoot Confederacy—the Blackfoot, Blood, Piegan and Sarcée.

By 1870, the bison-hunting way of life was already threatened by White encroachment and the introduction of the rifle which was rapidly wiping out the buffalo herds.

Mistahi-maskwa

Pitikwahanapiwiyn

Native leaders Pitikwahanapiwiyn (Poundmaker) ⁷ and Mistahi-maskwa (Big Bear) ⁸ realized they were losing their main source of food and they were willing to negotiate with the Canadian government. But they knew they needed more than a reserve and a small cash allowance to carve out a new way of life. To establish an agricultural society they needed farm animals, wagons, horses, tools and equipment—and farm instructors to advise them and help them adjust to the new way of life.

The Treaty Commissioner promised them all these things... but never delivered... and what they did give the 'redskin savages' was very much less than what was promised—such as giving one band the horses, tools and other equipment to plough with... which they had to share with other bands... so that by the time the time to seed the land hadst come and gone, there were still families which hadst not had time to turn the soil; the same is true of the time of harvest... whereas some crops hadst not the time to be reaped... and so, these rotted on the stock

⁷ Pitikwahanapiwiyn, called "Poundmaker" (1826-86), was a Plains Cree chief in the northwest, who was re-known as a peacemaker and a defender of his people, was recognized as a skilled orator and a wise leader—by both Native and non-Native communities. He emerged as a political leader during the tumultuous years surrounding the extension of the numbered treaty system and the influx of settlers into present-day Saskatchewan.

According to Cree oral history, Pitikwahanapiwiyn got his name because of a special ability to attract buffalo into a "buffalo pound" (somewhat resembling a huge corral): It was a very dangerous thing to do. Sometimes a herd of buffalo were stampeded into such a trap; on other occasions, the buffalo were drawn in quietly by a "pound-maker" dressed in a buffalo pelt and using a bell to capture the herd's attention. One time, it is said that Pitikwahanapiwiyn lured 500 buffalo into his pound, therefore earning him the name "Poundmaker."

⁸ Mistahi-maskwa (Big Bear, known in French as Gros Ours) was a powerful and popular Cree chief who played many pivotal roles in Saskatchewan history. He was born circa 1825, near Jackfish Lake, north of present-day North Battleford—and he died on 17 January 1888 on Little Pine Reserve. His father, Black Powder, an Ojibwa, was Chief of a small mixed-band of Cree and Ojibwa and his mother was a member of one of these nations.

By 1871, Mistahi-maskwa was the leading chief of the Prairie River People—and, by 1874 he headed a camp of 65 lodges (approximately 520 people).

Although Mistahi-maskwa appeared at the negotiations, he refused to sign Treaty No. 6: he was the first major chief on the prairies to do so. Over the next six years, he continued to refuse treaty. Finally, on 8 December 1882, faced with destitution and starvation, Mistahi-maskwa signed an adhesion to the treaty. At this time his following had dwindled to 114 people.

in the fields with the coming of the snow. And, the meat rations issued them was bony and/or rancid and rotten and/or maggoty. Time and time-again the indigenous leaders tried to make the government live up to its treaty promises... but, some 150 years later, the First Nations are yet fighting a losing battle with our deceptive parliamentarians up on 'the Hill' in Ottawa.⁹

Tired of waiting for the government to take action, the Siksika, Pikuni, and Kainai met in the fall of 1875 and prepared a letter to Governor Alexander Morris—the last Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba outlining their concerns. That same year, the Hunkpapa Lakota, who had recently won the Battle of Little Bighorn—supra against the Americans, arrived in Canada along with their chief, Thathánka Íyotake (Sitting Buffalo Bull), who met with Isapomuxika (Crowfoot). This meeting caught Ottawa's attention; the Dominion government had so far negotiated treaties peacefully... but was circumspect of the Lakota... therefore, they now preempted the threat of war that the Lakota posed and forced the Sarcée onto a small tract of land (bordering the Blackfoot Reserve on the north side of the Bow River). The Sarcée grudgingly accepted this, as they would have preferred a reserve further west—and they steadily declined in numbers until 1920.

On 22 September 1877, the Dominion representatives dictated the final terms of Treaty No. 7 such that the First Nations living within the boundaries cede roughly 130,000 square kilometers from the Rocky Mountains to Cypress Hills, and the Red Deer River to the 49th Parallel viz. the American border. All Nations retained their right to use the land for hunting, fishing, and trapping. The treaty also dictated that reserve lands would be established with each family of five receiving 2.59 square miles (6.47 square kilometers) (proportionately). The Siksika, Tsuu T'ina, and Kainai established reserves along the Bow River; the Pikuni at Crow's Creek; and the Stoney-Nakoda near the Methodist Mission in Morleyville on the recommendation of John McDougall.

Each person was to receive a one-time payment of $12 for signing the treaty with annuities of: $25 per head chief, $15 per minor chief or councilor, and $5 per person. All chiefs and councilors were allotted new suits every three years—and each chief was to receive a Winchester rifle along with $2000 for ammunition for the band. Chiefs were also to receive a bull, and families to receive cattle in ⁹ Cf., PM Stephen Harper's destruction of the Navigable Waters Protection Act (NWPA)—one of Canada's oldest laws protecting bodies of water across the country (first introduced in 1882), in cancelling and gutting environmental laws and selling out Canada's myriad lakes, rivers and streams to big business, corporate interests and foreign investment under the redefined 'Navigation Protection Act' (NPA)—covering only 97 lakes, 62 rivers and the three oceans on Canada's coasts. Transport Minister Denis Lebel, urged by the Rothschild Shell Canada and its Rio Tinto Group, rolled over like the dogs they are and, turning belly-up, surrendered without a fight to industrial projects such as 'fracking' in oilsands development or mining extraction by a syndicate made up of thirty of England's largest companies and a few Canadian investment houses, headed by N. M. Rothschild & Sons—and a Montréal investment company called United North Atlantic Securities Ltd.

Joey Smallwood

Anthony de Rothschild

PM Stephen Harper

Joseph "Joey" Smallwood—the main force who brought the Dominion of Newfoundland into the Canadian Confederation in 1949, becoming the first premier of Newfoundland and serving until 1972 was commanded by Anthony de Rothschild to close all crown lands in the Maritime Provinces to prospectors so that the Rothschilds could choose a fifty-thousand-square mile concession out of the seventy-one thousand unstaked claims in Labrador and Newfoundland—giving the Rothschilds first choice of mineral, power and lumber resources in an area considerably larger than the combined size of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

proportion to their family size. Finally, residential schools were to be established with teachers' salaries paid by the government.

It was the last of the treaties made in the 1800s. The next treaty would not be signed for another 20 years. The signing of Treaty 7 opened up 50,000 sq miles to development, an integral factor in the building and completion of the transcontinental railroad that the Dominion government had promised British Columbia as part of their negotiation into Confederation. Without this treaty, the railroad may not have been built and Canada may have had very different borders then the ones we enjoy now.

The End

Alexander Henry the Elder¹⁰ wrote of the Sarcée in his journal:

"The Sarcée are a distinct nation, and have an entirely different language from any other nation of the plains, and very difficult to acquire from the many guttural sounds it contains. Their land was formerly on the north side of the Saskatchewan, but they have now removed to the south side, and dwell commonly on the southward of the Beaver Hills, near the Slave Indians—with whom they are at peace. They have the name of being a brave and warlike people, whom the neighboring nations always appear desirous of being on amicable terms with. Their customs and manners seem to be nearly the same as the Crees, and their dress is the same. Their language bears a great resemblance to that of the Chipewyans; many words are exactly the same, from which their apparent emigration from the northward gives every cause to suppose them of that nation. They affect to despise the Slave Indians for their brutish and dastardly manners, and although comparatively few in number, frequently set them at defiance. They form ninety tents, containing about one hundred and fifty men bearing arms."

The Tsuut'ina (Sarcée) are of medium height, very few tall men being among them: the women, especially, being small. They were noted among other northern Plains tribes for their tanned bison robes and fine buckskins, likewise, for their handcrafted saddles and cherry-wood bows. As early as 1910 the Tsuut'ina were also noted as farmers and cattlemen... and they continued in these occupations to the present time.

During the old buffalo days they exhibited their pride in beautiful dresses and fine buffalo-skin lodges, but the departure of the buffalo reduced them to poverty, the lodges were used for moccasins, and many of their horses were sold to obtain food and clothing. The traders and the "old timers" in the country were ever suspicious of these people, believing them to be deceitful and, consequently, were on their guard against treachery. Like the other plain tribes, they were good hunters, delighting in hunting the buffalo, and when they had secured an abundance of food, spent their days and nights feasting and gambling.

¹⁰ Alexander Henry the Elder (August 1739 – 4 April 1824) was one of the leading pioneers of the British-Canadian fur trade, following the British Conquest of Nouvelle France; a partner in the North-West Company; and a founding member and vice-chairman of the Beaver Club.

Alexander Henry

Julia Calcutt

Peter Fidler

More-so, my mother's French-speaking Exovede / Métis father—a fifth generation paternal descendant of British explorer and fur-trader / HBC surveyor and map-maker Peter Fidler (16 August 1769 – 17 December 1822) of Bolsover, Derbyshire, England and Mary "Matheweman" Muskegon daughter of Swampy Cree Chief Mackegonne of York Factory (Hudson's Bay) was mothered by an Exovede / Métis fourth generation daughter of Julia Calcutt née Kittson of Montréal—whose grandson was part of the original syndicate that went on to create the Canadian Pacific Railway and Alexander Henry the Elder and Jean-Baptiste 'Okimawaskawikinam' Letendré dit Batoché—a bowsman ('foremost voyageur in a canoe') for the North-West Company, interpreter, fur trader and farmer, and co-founder of the Batoché settlement.

By 1879 the buffalo were gone and the people were hungry, government rations proved totally inadequate and the Sarcée were facing certain death by starvation. In the summer of 1880, the Sarcée were camped upon the Old Man's River, along with some Blackfoot and Blood Indians, where they were being supplied with rations by the Dominion government—the buffalo having left the plains and gone south to the plains and valleys of the Missouri and Yellowstone Rivers: (It was then estimated that the Sarcée numbered about seven hundred, although the government agent thought that there were not more than three or four hundred).¹¹

Almighty Voice

Lieutenant W^m Butler
Inspector Cecil Denny

Interpreter Jerry Potts

In 1880, under Chief Chula, the tribe loaded tipis, possessions, and families into wagons and drove westward toward Fort Calgary, avowing never to return to the Bow River Reserve. At Fort Calgary there was a confrontation with the North-West Mounted Police under the command of Inspector Cecil Denny. Fortunately bloodshed was averted and the Sarcée agreed to remove temporarily to Fort MacLeod until a new reserve could be found. In 1881 Chula and his people moved to their new reserve located beside the Elbow River, a few miles southwest of Calgary, Alberta. The Sarcée have remained on this reserve to the present day.

The early-21st century population has been estimated as ~1000 Sarcée descendants... and an estimated ~47 fluent speakers of the Tsuut'ina language, with another smaller segment of the population who can understand fluently.

¹¹ In 1820, Sir John Franklin estimated that there were one hundred and fifty lodges, with an average of eight persons to each lodge, or a total of twelve hundred persons. John Rowand, an old trader, in 1848 counted forty-five lodges, or three hundred and fifty persons. Sir George Simpson reckoned fifty lodges and three hundred and fifty persons in the year 1841: During the previous months of the small-pox he had counted at the Marias' River not less than one hundred "dead lodges," in which there was an average of ten bodies. It is, therefore, difficult to make a correct estimate of this tribe with such conflicting testimony, but there is no doubt that the population must have been quite numerous, lessened at times through the depopulating ravages of plague and war. They were said to be "the oldest of all the tribes that inhabit the plains," and the most independent and impudent tribe of Indians dwelling in the British Northwest. They have ever been friends and allies of the Blackfoot, and enemies of the Crees—notwithstanding, at times they have protected solitary Crees against the evil intentions of the other Blackfoot Confederacy tribes.

Sir John Franklin

John Rowand

Sir George Simpson